Others have probably observed as well that after the forum upgrade, attachments are still getting queued for a long time, e.g. the attachment in this post has been queued for almost two hours:

Why do my shots look awesome on the monitor but too dark in print?

Greetings,

I'm using Elements 6.0 for Mac. I shoot wide angle shots that are beautiful on my iMac screen, and I have had some suggestions. But when I take the files to my printer, the shots are so dark I can't use them.

Any ideas?

Thanks,
ET Evans

Is there an ETA on a fix for this? If it's going to be awhile, can attachments just be disabled until it's fixed?

In the meantime people can be advised to just use the camera icon for images, they appear immediately.

Thanks. I had searched this forum for previous postings with "queued" but forgot that search doesn't do stemming and that I needed to explicitly search subforums as well.

Wow! I wonder if the virus-checker is turned off, or just speeded up - a lot?

this isn't the first time that attachments went instantly online, last time this happened it only lasted for a couple of days. Lets hope they finally figured it out and it stays like this

I seem to recall that it was also a weekend last time the queue was speedy.

Apparently the virus checking hamsters only work part time and on weekends.

Just seen an attachment that's been queued for over an hour. I wonder what we are to consider normal?
