

Guided Inquiry in practice

Lee Fitzgerald is a lecturer in teacher librarianship at the School of Information Studies, Charles Sturt University. She has worked there since 2014, following a career as a teacher librarian in school libraries, primary and secondary, government and independent. She has a passion for teacher librarianship and the burgeoning theory and practice of guided inquiry.

Adobe Acrobat

The document could not be saved. Write error.

OK

Scan journal values research as a process which:

- strengthens the theoretical basis for the practice of teacher librarianship
- informs practice through the application of findings, questioning assumptions and identification and analysis of practical problems
- is informed by practice as part of a cycle of professional evaluation.